Majority Prefer Dutch Masters

By INA D. D. UHTHOFF

The highly successful showing of the Hammer collection of paintings by the old masters is now nearing the end of its allotted time in Victoria.

It would be interesting to know which pictures attracted the most attention. Many people appeared to be studying the Rubens, the Breughels, the Van Dycks and the Franz Hals, all painters of the Flemish or Dutch school.

Flemish painting was greatly influenced by the artists who had visited Italy during the 16th century. The native character took on a superficial virtuosity which was foreign to it.

Peter Paul Rubens adopted the Italian manner to a greater extent than any other Flemish painter of that time. Flamboyant and opulent, the rhythmical interplay of lines and volumes and the luscious quality of the paint weave the figures into intricate design of masterly execution. But Rubens is not considered to be one of the world's greatest painters, because of the lack of restraint in his work.

This is not the case with the work of Pieter Breughel the Elder who brought up his two sons, Pieter the Younger and Jan or "Velvet," to be painters like himself. In fact, Pieter the Younger copied his father's work so often that a great deal of confusion now exists. "The Tax Collector" is an example of this. The subject matter and composition are reminiscent of the work of the father but the craftsmanship falls short in many ways.

Breughel the Elder was the greatest "genre" painter the world has seen. The paintings of his sons carry on the tradition of homespun character.

Another Flemish painter was Anthony Van Dyck, a pupil of Rubens.

His absorbing passion was elegance and he flattered his sitters at the expense of characterization.

Of the two paintings in the Hammer collection, the portrait of Queen Henrietta Maria of England is the better example of Van Dyck's work.

We now turn to another painter of portraits, but with what a difference! Here, there is no elegance. But there is life, movement and love of the common man.

The work of Franz Hals was held in low esteem. He was at toper of low degree who frequented the taverns of Haarlem, passing roisterous hours with his cronies there.

A painter by profession, he could knock off a portrait at a sitting, even after a prolonged debauch. Sometimes he exercised extraordinary control; at others, with drunken good luck, he could catch and sustain the fleeting impression of a personality long enough to be able to put it on canvas.

Nixon Backers Ready to Hedge

DES MOINES Iowa, (AP)—Vice-President Nixon apparently retains top-heavy support among Republican national committee members for the party's 1960 presidential nomination—but his position is shaky.

A check of committeemen who met here this week to discuss policy disclosed some hedging on Nixon if Governor Rockefeller of New York should become an active candidate for the nomination.

State chairman Daniel McLean of Massachusetts was willing to take the plunge on Rockefeller without delay.

McLean, who said Friday that if the party comes up with "another Eisenhower we can win in 1960," said he believes Republicans need the most attractive candidate they can get.

"I think we have got to have a Rockefeller to win," he said.

Thomas Judd, Utah state chairman, sounded a note echoed by several of his colleagues when he said he is a Nixon man right now "but 18 months from now I could be a Rockefeller man."

Claude Jasper, Wisconsin chairman, put it somewhat differently:

"We in the party owe Nixon a great deal for all the work he has put in for us. I'm all for Nixon right now, but I recognize that he can stub his toe. Rockefeller also could stub his toe, of course, but he will have to be given consideration."

Lack of Bibles Leaving Door Open to Reds

Communism is winning over Christianity in Africa and Asia because of a shortage of Christian Scriptures, the Victoria Branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society was told last night.

"Millions of people, learning to read, must be content with the propaganda of Lenin" because of this shortage, Rev. J. A. R. Tingley of Vancouver, provincial secretary of the society, said during a rally held at Emmanuel Baptist Church.

For the first time in its 154 years, the Bible Society has been forced to reduce production of Scriptures "due to lack of support on the part of Christian people who, while enjoying the great blessings of the open Bible, are doing so little to share those blessings with the world," he said.
